Dear Pat:

I hope that you have had a chance to look over the draft outline of a sort-of contract to cover the materials and work we discussed briefly just before I left Washington in the middle of January.

With a view to making my plans for work when we return to Washington, the latter part of this month or early next month, I would be grateful if you could send me as soon as possible, via Miss Young, the reaction you and your colleagues [have] had in regard to the draft outline.

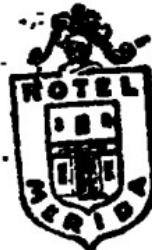

If what I have proposed therein seems a logical first step toward a series of similar type projects but advancing in complexity, and if this first draft seems to cover about what you and I have in mind, then I suggest that the draft, the discussed by you with those who would be involved in drawing up the ^{actual} contract, except, of course, as to the amount of money to be paid and how this we can, I am sure, discuss and agree upon just as soon as I return.

We are having a lovely vacation here. The sunshine and warmth are particularly to our liking.

Very cordial greetings,
 Mr. Shelby Patterson,
 NSA.

Sincerely,
 William J. Friedman
